

22. As per claim 11, Davis et al fail to teach wherein a user may not access any of the applications unless the user has obtained an account through the registration module. However, "Official Notice" is taken that concept and advantage of requiring a user to register for access is well known in the art. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to include this feature in Davis et al because doing so would limit access to only registered users and also allow for the system to monitor usage.
